

Autism David Christopher, M.H.

I receive many inquiries about autism including what is a person to do to protect their children from this devastating syndrome. First I have to explain what autism is and what it is not.

“Autism is a neurodevelopmental disorder that impairs a child’s ability to communicate and interact with others. It also includes restricted repetitive behaviors, interests and activities.” -Mayo Clinic

Besides this definition let me list what is the medical mainstream view of autism.

Medical view:

*It is a psychiatric disorder

*It is not an epidemic. Rather current diagnosis is better today and it is an ancient disorder.

*It is genetic

*It is not environmental

*It is not due to toxins

*It does not include intestinal disease

*Exclusion diets are not helpful

*Regression is extremely rare

*There is no recovery

Commenting on their views from the last mentioned to the first, I have heard of recoveries and I have witnessed improvements. Regression is not rare but is the norm. In other words they were not born with the condition but developed it. Exclusion diets are extremely helpful. A majority of autistic children have accompanying gastro-intestinal disease. Damage to brain cells in autistic children follows the same pattern as all other reported environmental toxic damage. It cannot be genetic, at least according to the top geneticists in the country. If going from one child in ten thousand to one child in one hundred in three decades doesn’t qualify as an epidemic then what does? It is definitely an epidemic unprecedented in the history of the world, whether they want to admit it or not. If their “newspeak” is correct in terms of it being an ancient disease and increases are solely due to improved diagnosis, then of the 10 billion people who lived on the earth prior to 1930 over one billion people would have been autistic according to present percentages. Shouldn’t we ask, “Is it possible that not one physician ever came in contact with even one of those autistic individuals?” That is highly unlikely due to the preciseness of disease description of physicians of earlier centuries. Finally, it is recorded in the medical texts starting from the 1930's "that autism was a psychological disorder found only in the children of well-educated and wealthy people." That is disproven today. However, we can point out the correlating fact that in the late 30's only rich people could afford the mercury and aluminum laden vaccines. Only when the vaccines became affordable did autism show up in the middle class. In addition, only when the vaccines were mandated did autism show up in poor families. Similar to lead, mercury and aluminum are environmental toxins. It doesn't matter whether you breathe them in, absorb them from water through the skin or have them injected into the body through needles they all cause nerve damage.

In conclusion, I tell everyone I can that autism is extremely difficult to treat and should be avoided at all costs- so do not let anyone inject toxins into your children. If they already have been damaged then fruit juice cleansing and metal pulling routines as explained in Dr. Christopher's Three Day Cleanse book are advised.
